USING THE OPPORTUNITIES OF CRIMINAL SCIENCE IN THE ACTIVITIES OF INVESTIGATORS

Socio-economic transformations in our state are reflected in the activities of law enforcement agencies. Forensic knowledge is gaining considerable attention in the activities of the latter. Some people believe that knowledge of the relevant discipline is not always relevant for future law enforcement officers, but this view is erroneous and needs our attention.

It should be emphasized that the study of the above science not only provides relevant theoretical knowledge, but directly allows the formation of certain skills and analytical thinking, allows you to fully develop the skills of observation, which are essential for work in law enforcement. Also, their mastery and ability to use in practice, allows you to increase the professionalism of professionals who have chosen their life's work - work in law enforcement. [1]

Forensics is inextricably linked to the investigation of any type of criminal offense, which involves the collection of relevant information necessary to establish the circumstances of criminal proceedings. Thanks to the many methods provided to us by forensics, we can assess the scene, correctly record all the evidence we need, and the most important, in our opinion, is the study of more important information that exposes the identity of the offender (his features, mental and psychological state and other) [2].

Regarding the problems that currently arise in the practical component of law enforcement, we note that crime has now gained more modern momentum and there are many offenses characterized by technicality and information, which can be committed on the Internet, so it would be appropriate to improve application of certain methods and means to combat crime in this area.

This requires constant attention from researchers in the search, based on the study of problems of practice, ways to solve existing difficulties of investigation. No less attention needs to be paid to such an integral phenomenon that accompanies most investigations, as counteraction, which has recently acquired special significance and relevance [3].

The circumstances identified by us give us the opportunity to think about further improving the provision of forensic equipment and recommendations for improving the activities of law enforcement in the modern conditions of combating illegal activities.

Thus, we can conclude that the role and importance of criminology are no less important than all others among other sciences, because thanks to this relevant knowledge, skills improvement improves and increases the efficiency of law enforcement, and it becomes easier to investigate and establish all the circumstances. committed criminal offense and assessment of the actions of each of its participants. Advances in science and technology, analysis of ways of committing criminal offenses, proper assessment and taking measures to overcome the opposition to pre-trial investigation require constant improvement and implementation in practice.
